

National Speaking Presentation:
Health Reform and the Decline of Physician Private Practice

Presentation Theme:

How will health reform affect the way physicians practice in the United States?

What practice models are likely to be most prevalent in the post-reform era?

How will health reform affect physician supply and demand, and how can hospitals, medical groups and others extend the physician work force?

Merritt Hawkins, the nation’s leading physician search and consulting firm, was commissioned by The Physicians Foundation, a non-profit grant making organization composed of physician leaders, to provide answers to these and related questions. The result of the firm’s effort is a major report and survey entitled, Health Reform and the Decline of Physician Private Practice.

Executives with Merritt Hawkins reveal the findings of the report in a timely and dynamic presentation that gets to the heart of how health reform will transform the way physicians practice in America. Highlights of the presentation include:

Presentation Bullet Points
Results of a survey of 2,400 physicians showing what physicians really think of health reform
Key provisions of health reform that will most directly affect physician practices
Case studies of medical homes, accountable care organizations, concierge practices and other practice models likely to proliferate in the post-reform era
Startling legal/compliance obligations imposed on physicians by health reform
Provisions of reform that will most directly affect physician supply
Methods to extend the physician work force as the doctor shortage accelerates
